

Nova Scotia village picked as setting for reality TV show

Last Updated: Wednesday, July 9, 2008 | 2:04 PM ET   Comments  12   Recommend  33

CBC News

Tatamagouche is losing its women for a week.

The village in northern Nova Scotia has been chosen as the setting for the next instalment of the reality TV show, The Week the Women Went.

The premise involves sending the women away for seven days to see how the men and children cope in their absence.

Paperny Films announced Tuesday that it had picked Tatamagouche over Mabou, another small Nova Scotia community. It was a close decision, the production company said, but Tatamagouche tipped the scales on enthusiasm.

Production begins in September. The show is scheduled to air on CBC Television in January.

The first instalment of the show was set in Hardisty, a small town in east-central Alberta.